XX.    TEACHING (University of Toronto)

"Becoming Israel: War, Peace, and the Politics of Israel's Identity" (undergraduate)
"International Relations Theory" (core course, graduate)
"The Constructivist Turn in International Relations Theory" (graduate)

XXI.   RESEARCH INTERESTS

International relations theory, especially the construction of social reality and the relationship between knowledge and power. Non-state international actors, in particular, epistemic communities. Theories of cooperation and conflict resolution, with special emphasis on Israel, the Middle East, and the Mediterranean area. International and regional security, in particular, the development of security communities. Israeli foreign and security policies and the relationship between rationality, identity, and solutions to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. European security institutions, in particular, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. Peaceful transitions of major powers in theoretical and historical perspective. Most recently, projects on a theory of "cognitive evolution" about the change and stability of international social orders; international practices and communities of practice; a constructivist reconsideration of strategic logic, including deterrence, European cooperative security and pluralistic integration; European civilization as a community of practice, Israel's relations with the world; and revisiting epistemic communities.
